Isfahan is one of the oldest cities in Iran that has lived for a long time. In this regard, the famous archaeologist Roman Ghirshman, while discussing how the "Median civilization" was formed, says: "A branch of the Medes spread in Isfahan and there the Elamites prevented them from advancing. ». It follows that the Medes and Elamites arrived in Isfahan around 700 BC. The city is located at an altitude of 1500 meters above sea level and is surrounded by deserts and semi-deserts. Two important factors have caused the growth and prosperity of Isfahan: one is the "Zayandehrud" river as the most water-rich river in the central part of Iran and the other is the geographical location of this city. In fact, the location of this city in the middle of the roads of the great centers of ancient trade, namely Damascus and Aleppo in the west and Samarkand and Bukhara in the east, as well as its central location in Iran has led to be the capital of two powerful Seljuk and Safavid dynasties. Isfahan has been one of the major commercial centers since that time.

The word "horse" (Aspa), the good creature mentioned in the Avesta, is from prehistoric times and most likely Median language (or Parthian, Avestan), and in ancient Persian was "asa" and in Sanskrit "acva". And many mythological names in ancient texts are derived from this word, such as "spris" meaning horse racing field and "spet" meaning alfalfa, which has been translated into some other languages with different pronunciations. The past of this breed is not yet well known, but it is undoubtedly very old and has its roots in the Middle East and the plains and mountains or semi-mountains of this region. During the efforts of the Iranians before the Achaemenids in breeding and reforming this race, thoroughbred horses were born that were amazed at their agility and endurance, but most breeding activities took place during the Parthian period in northeastern Iran. Parthians who were skilled horsemen after taking power in Iran in 250 AH. M. preferred the Persian horse to the Turkmen horse and over time brought about the breeding and resistance of this breed.
